

Accommodations

Employers have a legal duty to accommodate the needs of people who are negatively impacted by requirements, rules or standards at work due to their membership in a protected group. This includes race, colour, creed/religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, age, disability, etc. For example, allowing flexible working hours and/or breaks to allow an Indigenous employee to attend a spiritual ceremony.