

Payment for Training

	Provincially Regulated	Federally Regulated
Payment for Training:	Employers generally must pay employees for time spent in training that is required by the employer or by law as a condition of employment. This is considered “work time” under the Employment Standards Act (ESA).	Employers are generally obligated to pay employees for training time that is required by the employer, as this training is considered “work time” under The Code.